Dear Readers,

Firstly, I want to extend my heartfelt thank you and congratulate all the reviewers for the efforts they have put into this issue. The world is changing very fast, and the developments in the field of social sciences and technology require necessary and urgent discussion. This issue contains research papers on a range of topics, including AI, post-COVID education, agricultural commodity spots and future market trends, the role of Instagram in spreading political awareness in the biggest election of the world has been discussed. Furthermore, gender norms in poetry, neo-colonial Japan, and work on the house of Bernarda Alba found a place in this edition.

The discussions on the futuristic development of India have been given emphasis in the current issue with the studies on “Kanya Shiksha Pravesh Abhiyan”, a postal saving scheme and critical analysis of sectoral allocation of budget. This VJR issue is definitely going to enrich the research and help the academia with rich inputs.
